Senate yesterday a motion made by Mr. Sawyer to proceed to the consideration of private pension cases was agreed to, and such bills were taken up on their order on the calendar.

Mr. Cockrell insisted on having the reports read in a number of the cases, and had some of the bills that he considered of doubtful propriety postponed.

In a short debate on one of the bills, covering a case that had been rejected by the pension office, Mr. Cockrell said the chief of division in that office who had rejected so plain and well proven a case ought to be discharged from the service of the United States.

A number of pension bills having been disposed of, the bankruptcy bill was laid before the Senate, and, with Mr. Hoar's assent, was laid aside informally in favor of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. That bill in turn, with the assent of Mr. Prumb, was allowed to stand over in order to permit Mr. Gibson to address the Senate on the subject of Mr. Piutt's resolution regarding open executive seasons. garding open executive sessions.

Mr. Gibson reviewed broadly the historic phases of the element of secrecy as a factor in government from the time when the English parliament prohibited publication of its debates to the present time, when the United States Senate discusses treaties with closed doors and conducts secret inquisitions into the character of persons nominated for office. Mr. Gibson denied that any necessity now existed for the discussion of treaties in secret. However desirable secrety might have been in the early history of our republic, it was no longer desirable secrety might have been in the early history of our republic, it was no longer desirable. With regard to the consideration of nominations for offices, Mr. Gibson maintained that the offices belonged to the people. Selections for offices were made in two ways, either by election or nomination. In the case of persons who were candidates for elective offices, the character and qualifications of the applicant were fully discussed in public and in the press. This was right and reasonable. Why should not the same rule apply to persons selected for office in a proposition of the officeholderders, nor as objects of official patronage; not as personal or political perquisites, but for the necessary work of the people.

Mr. Hoar, alluding to a remark made by Mr. Gibson, as to the Senate's treatment of nominations, asked Mr. Gilson whether the Senate or any member of it claimed to treat the public offices as matters of patronage to day.

the public offices as matters of patronage to-day.

Mr. Gibson did not know that he could Mr. Gitson did not know that he could name any individual senator who treated them so; but the history of the Senate showed that many of the leading senators, in past times, considered that their wishes ought to be decisive with the Executive; and when their wishes had not been compiled with, senators had so felt so humiliated that some of them, at a period not very remote from this, had resigned their places in the Senate.

Mr. Hoar, while admitting that there might be some truth in Mr. Gibson's statement so far as it related to times past, contended that it did not apply to any considerable number of senators for the period covered by the past ten years. He thought every member of the Senate at the time, on both sides of the chamber, would most emphalically disclaim any such view for himself.

Mr. Gibson had no desire to make any personal application of his remarks, but every senator knew that in times past it was considered the political right of the senator from a state not only to be consulted as to appointments in his own state, but that he was even entitled to control them.

them. Mr. Hoar said nobody had ever imputed any such claim to him in all his public life.

He desired, nowever, as a thorough believer in civil service reform, to say that he did not believe there was now in the Senate a vestige of the claim or practice referred to.

Mr. Gibson admitted that during the past year there had been a decided change in therespect referred to.

Mr. Platt said patronage had been the political ruin of senators more than had any other cause. Many senators who had been strong in other respects had been relegated to private life on account of their use of the patronage of the government.

He (Mr. Platt) had also, since he had been

He (Mr. Platt) had also, since he had been in the Senate, found it the general, if not the universal, custom of senators to solicit nominations at the hands of the President and then come to the Senate and act on such nominations in secret session. If there could be a more monstrous impropriety than that Mr. Platt would like to know what it was.

know what it was.
Mr. Hoar admitted that during Andrew Johnson's administration, when the ma-jority of both houses of Congress supposed the very existence of the republic to be at stake, the Senate undertook to deal with stake, the Senate undertook to deal with the functions of government, to some extent, as if it had been a "continental congress" and the government without any executive head. But the nomination of President Hayes was meant by the Republican party to be a trampling out of that practice, and the practice was effectually and thoroughly trampled out, He (Mr. Hoar) did not believe that any of the political "ruins" to which Mr. Platt alluded were in the Senate to-day.

were in the Senate to-day.

Mr. Morrill said he expected to speak gainst open executive sessions, and in-quired when the matter was to be dis-quired when the matter was to be discussed.

Mr. Platt said he would move to take his resolution up immediately after disposal of the bankruptey bill.

Mr. Teller was confident that for the past ten years no considerable number of senators had entertained the views about patronage to which Mr. Gibson had referred. He (Mr. Teller) had never heard it asserted in that time by any Republican that a senator was entitled to control the offices in his own state. He thought the members of the House of Representatives were apt to have more influence in controlling the offices, because the departments could not always know the applicants for office, and were in the habit of applying for information to the member of the House representing the applicant's district.

The matter of executive sessions here dropped and the Senate took up the bank, ruptey bill.

Mr. Plumb opposed the bill as being in the interest of great cities like New York and Boston, and against small dealers throughout the country. He regarded it as a most victous bill.

Mr. Hoar defended the bill, differing entirely with Mr. Plumb as to its effect, and contending that it was decidedly in the interest of small traders, many of whom, without such a bankruptcy law, if overtaken by misfortune, must go through life as paupers, dragging "at each remove a lengthening chain."

Mr. Teller asked whether Mr. Hoar could produce any petitions or other evidence to

THE HOUSE.

The ordinary business of Monday was transacted rapidly yesterday, after which a struggle for priority of consideration arose between the special orders. Mr. Cobb, of Indiana, was on his feet demanding that the House should consider land forfeiture bills; Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, brought forward the "oleomargarine bill," with a motion to go into committee of the whole for its discussion; Mr. Miller, of Texas, pressed the claims of the banking and currency committee, to whose business the day had been assigned; Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, asserted f the right of the committee on military affairs to a portion of the day, and Mr. Cox, of North Carolina, called up the report of the civil service reform committee on the Jeffersonville levee matter. This lest named being a question of privilege. THE HOUSE. on the Jeffersonville levee matter. This lest named being a question of privilege, Mr. Hatch raised against itäthe question of consideration, and the House stood by him, deciding by a vote of 122 to 45 not to consider the privileged business,

Mr. Hatch then scored another victory, his motion being agreed to—yeas 140, nays 84, and the House accordingly went into ommittee of the whole, Mr. Springer, of committee of the whole, Mr. Springer, of Illinols, in the chair, on general revenue bills.

The first measure of this character on the calendar was the Morrison tariff bill, which was passed over without objection, but a contest was made over setting saide the next revenue bill, being one to reduce the number of laternal revenue officers.

The matter was submitted to the House for its determination, and that body having decided, yeas 136, nays 189, to pass over the internal revenue bill, the committee resumed its session, and the "oleomargarine" bill was taken up.

Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, expressed his approval of the provisions of the bill. Some legislation of this character was absolutely necessary if one of the chief industries of the country was to be spared from the doom which now threatened it. The bill did no injustice to the manufacturers of infitation butter; it simply raised the farmer to the plane of fair and honest competition. Discussing the constitutional features of the measure, he argued that, under the general welfare clause of the constitution, it was perfectly competent and proper for Congress to legislate upon the subject.

Mr. Hopkins, of Illinols, said that the emeriment of this bill into a law would be but tardy justice to a most deserving class of citizens. The manufacturer of bogus butter was as destructive to public, morals as the counterfeiting of money, and he hoped that Congress would lay a heavy hand on this greatest of all modern deceptions.

Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, argued that the bill as a measure to services the manufacturer.

Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, argued that Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, argued that the bill, as a measure to suppress the manufacture of oleomargarine, was unconstitutional. It was protection run mad. It was a bill to popularize the internal revenue system. Every one would be hereafter coming to Congress asking for protection from competition. The whole time of Congress would be then taken up in an attempt to catch up with American rascality—a thing that was impossible. The farmers were more interested in retaining the American form of government in its purity than in suppressing the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Mr. Reagan, of Texas, said that it was Mr. Rengan, of Texas, said that it was very plain, both from the language of the bill and the arguments made in its support, that the purpose of the bill was not revenue but exclusion. It was legislation in favor of the people who made butter and against those who made olcomargarine. He deprested the constant violation of the constitution, and said that if things went on as they had been going on this session, he would not be surprised to see a man come here and claim damages from the government if a storm blew a tree down and broke his fence.

Mr. Stubbs, of Icwa, suggested that the constitution had been violated by Democratic votes.

constitution has been vision and ex-oratic votes.

Mr. Reagan admitted this fact, and ex-pressed his shame at having to admit it. He did not pretend to excuse it. The Re-publicans might be excused because they did not believe there was any constitution.

publicans might be excused, because they did not believe there was any constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. Hiscock, of New York, earnestly dwelt upon the magnitude and importance of the subject upon which the House was called to legislate. The dairy interests of the country were being disastrously affected by the manufacture of imitation compounds, which were ville in their constituent parts, and which carried with them the germs of disease. This vile dirty product, freighted with disease, was palmed off as a healthy product, and a full price charged for it. Something must be done to save the farmer from the present ruinous competition with cheap imitations of butter and to protect the people at large from the injurious effects consequent on a consumption of the vile compound. This compound should be made to pay a tax, and this could be done, he maintained, without any violation of the constitution. There was a long line of precedents for the imposition of such a tax. The power to tax was not limited alone to the necessities of the government for the amount of revenue derived. The power to tax being conceded, there was no limitation to its exercise except the discretion of Congress. Democratic conventions had declared for taxation for revenue with incito its exercise except the discretion of Con-gress. Democratic conventions had de-clared for taxation for revenue with inci-dental protection. The principles under-lying that declaration carried with it the power on the part of Congress to enact this law. This was a question, he con-tended, which must be considered by the general government in response to the de-mands of the people of the states, who had petitioned that action should be taken. The committee then rose, and the House, at 5 o'clock, adjourned.

Justic Cox, in the court in general term, yesterday delivered the opinion of the court in the case of Moses C. Green against Samuel Norment, the principal point involved being the number of witnesses to a will to pass real estate. In 1866 Charles Brooks died leaving some property, including two houses on Third street southwest. His will was witnessed by two witnesses only. In settling up the estate the houses were sold. Green, as an heir, entered suit to recover possession on the ground that the will, being witnessed by two persons, was not sufficient, and could not pass real estate. In the circuit court judgment was given in favor of Green, and the general term affirms this judgment.

New York, May 24 .- Saturday night the feeling on the street was almost universally in favor of higher prices, although there was a large party which believed the upward movement would be short-lived, and to-day's market gives color to their opinion. There was less bulsness than opinion. Here was less business than usual the last few days, and the upward movement, except in the grangers, was siuggish. The early dealings, in fact, showed considerable heaviness in a great many stocks. The loaning rates were much easier, and there was a plentiful supply of stock to be had for the asking, indicating that the short interest has been materially stock to be had for the asking, indicating that the short interest has been materially reduced. Later in the day even the favorite stocks gave away, and final figures were close to the lowest of the day.

There was good buying of Eric, however, toward the close, and the evidence points to the same party that has alvanced St. Paul and its kindred stocks as the purchaser. The recent heavy grain traffic over the Eric is a good reason for the buying to-day. New York and New England also showed considerable life in the afternoon, after the receipt of a telegram from Boston announcing that a dividend on the preferred stock was expected to be declared to-day. It Should be Generally Known It Should be Generally Known that the multitude of diseases of a scrotulous nature generally proceed from a torpid condition of the liver. The blood becomes impure because the liver does not act properly and work off the poison from the system, and the certain results are blotches, pimples, cruptions, swalings, tumors, ulcers, and kindred affections, or settling uron the tunes and poisoning their delicate tissues, until ulceration, breaking down, and consumption is established. Dr. Pierco's "doiden Medical Discovery" will, by acting upon the liver and purifying the blood, cure all these diseases.

CHASE FINED $50.

He Makes a Retraction and Gots Off Easy-Attorney Taggart's Nosegay. Easy—Attorney Taggart's Nosegay.

"If your honor please, this is the morning which the court assigned for passing sentence on Wm. Calvin Chase, and I have some copies of the paper." Mr. Taggart had got this far in addressing Justice Marthur in the criminal court yesterday morning in the case of Chase, who had been convicted of publishing a libel on Miss Jennie Spear, when a young lady, neatly dressed, stepped quietly through the door pext the jury box, carrying in her hand a handsome basket of flowers. She walked direct to Mr. Taggart, placed the basket on the deak before the assistant district attorney, and moved right slong without making any stop at all, and took a seat far back in the room. The act was not only neatly done, but was so much of a surprise that Mr. Taggart was completely broken up, and could not proceed for a few minutes. His embarrasament and the compilment were appreciated by the audience who applauded it. Attached to the basket was a card bearing the following: "To Mr. Taggart for his able address in the Chase libel case."

When the assistant district attorney recovered his composure he called further attention to the case of Chase and asked for the imposition of sentence.

Justice MacArthur said that a copy of the Bee had been sent him last week containing a retraction of the article reflecting on Miss Jennie Spear and Miss Josie Norris, school teachers. He thought the apology was quite generous and had been given as much publicity as the first article. In making this publication the defendant had relieved the court from imposing a serious punishment. For had it not been done the defendant would have been sent to prison and probably for a lengthy period. Now, however, under all the circumstances, he shought a light sentence would be satisfactory, and imposed a fine of $50.

A Libel Case Dismissed. A Libel Case Dismissed.

In the Criminal court yesterday a nolic pros. was entered in the case of William J. Armstrong, indicted for publishing a libel in the Notional Not Pross on August 20, 1826, on Dr. W. H. Hale. It was shown that the prosecuting witness was now in Omaha and was recently arrested in Pittsburg, Pa., on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Justice McArthurdid not think the case of sufficient importance to occupy the attention of the court and directed the nolic pros. to be entared.
